Doctoa Coldwell, a physician as eminent for his benevolence as his practice, was riding near some cottages which stood on a lonely common, when he was stopped by a woman, who begged him, for Gods sake, to alight, and look at a poor child who as dying of the smallpox. The doctor entered the hut, and found a middle-aged woman, apparently the worse of liquor, weeping over a wretched baby. The childs face was covered with pustules, and it lingered in the last stage of that dreadful...
