Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Gospel of the Typical Servitude: The Substance of a Sermon Preached in Greenfield, Jan; 1, 1834 The Koran, which Mahomet gave his followers abounds with immoralities and palpable contradictions. They account for it by saying that their prophet recorded his revelations just as they were brought to him by the angel Gabriel, that they were imparted to him at different times, during the course of twenty three years; and that in the intervals, the Almighty so frequently changed his mind, that one revelation contradicts another. This convenient story is perfectly satisfactory to Mussehn. But all Christendom consider it sufficient grounds for pronouncing their prophet, before heaven and earth, a convicted imposter. It is mortifying to be told that in the Christian church there are thousands, including some of our most distinguished theologians, who give no better account of the word of God. They assert that principles and practices are inculcated in the old Testament which are at war with the morality of the new. They contend, particularly, that the law of Moses licensed a...
