Excerpt: . . . within, by the hope which looks for Him unto salvation, and by the assurance of the eternal inheritance awaiting him; the contemplation of this will protect him from many of earth's distractions, and from the desire to build on any branch of the forest condemned to death. How is it preserved By dwelling in the secret of His presence. How often is that place of safety assailed The curiosity of the natural man must be restrained, and thus the idle questioning of things and people, which can have no value to one whose aim is to win Christ. How soon is the sensitiveness to the Holy Spirits influence obscured, when the mind receives and ponders on worldly pleasures and maxims and its selfish policy, and the aimless talk of those who know nothing of the divine life; such things fail not to cast a...
